“Recent conversations about Studio Culture and Learning & Teaching Culture have done a lot to raise awareness about and ultimately mitigate the ill effects of toxic environments that exist in some architectural curricula.” AIAS Report from May 5, 2020 ARE THE KIDS ALRIGHT?

A Perspective of How Covid-19 is Affecting Architecture Students <https://www.aias.org/are-the-kids-alright/>

“Why don’t you have a laptop?”; “Why don’t you have a camera? You’re an architecture student.”;

“Why are you working so much when you are supposed to be focused on school?”

- Students lacking adequate funds for software and appropriate computers
- BIPOC students feel isolated
- BIPOC students have never met an architect who looks like them
- “...why is what we are learning in school almost entirely Eurocentric?”

“Going on these dates initially was a very unattractive idea to me. I felt as though I had found my people and I was comfortable where I was. After having experienced this, I realize I was very wrong. Talking to people that share even one similar interest with me (architecture) has been very enlightening and I have loved it thus far. I realize many people here share the same passions, opinions, and interests with me. While it is an assignment technically, I have brought myself to talk to more people outside of my comfort zone as this year has gone on, and i’m (sic) very thankful for it.”

“I did not see the point of these dates at first because I have been with these groups for the past three years. However, I figured out that in the time I spent with the state is that I learned more about them just by spending time getting coffee with them than I did all those three years. I’ve discovered more about their families, their interests, their personalities, and how they are outside of the studio. Also, you learned a lot more about what people consider a date, like they go out to eat or get coffee, but you also know about them like what food they like to eat and how they want to take their coffee orders. I also learned a lot about myself.”

“By going on these dates, I realized how much of a bubble I have been in throughout architecture school.”

“I do think there is some sort of experimenting that happens, but is that a bad thing?”

“I also think that the ‘clients’ are/should be expecting something a little different from a regular home. It is FREE. You can not (sic) argue with that.”

“They are getting something that they want virtually for free. No one can argue about getting something for free. A client getting something for free is more open to ideas as opposed to a client who is paying.”

Toxic architecture education

- “Hidden Curriculum” - Thomas Dutton
- “Gender and Racial Bias in Design Juries” - Mark Paul Frederickson
- Lack of faculty or professional mentors that look like them
- Competitive studio culture
- Tearing students down to build them back up
- Competition to please the professor

Equip current faculty to continue to develop empathy with students, staff, and peers that are of different identities. Knowing that developing empathy requires encouragement, awareness, knowledge, skills, practice, and accountability. Support cross-identity mentoring. (See the Mentorship and Sponsorship guide.) Student Agency & Hierarchy

Students choose topical projects

- Habitat for Humanity
- Audubon Society
- Starkville Strong
- Mississippi's Toughest Kids

Memorial Studio - Alternative studio practices

- Researching topics important to them
- Selecting their final memorial topic
- Presentations as “conversations” not juries
- Students select readings, podcasts, and videos on empathy and ethics
- Students develop assignments and requirements and how graded

Conclusion

Impact

- Developing empathy

Agency

- Ethics and empathy improves academics as well as agency

Self-Reflection

- Importance of reflections and reciprocity

Learning about others

- Research about needs of others
- Empathy and ethics must be taught and used together

Still some othering tendencies

- Architects must understand life and the human form in relation to space as a part of developing empathy as examined by Pallasmaa, Mallgrave, Robinson, and Gallese in “Architecture and Empathy.”
